Duty of a Policeman

A country is as good as its laws, and with enforcing laws comes peace. While many citizens pay attention to follow each and every law of the country, there are few people that do not pay any heed to these laws. The policeman is entrusted with the duty of maintaining law and order and bringing harmony, peace and joy in the country. The policemen arrest and control people who break the laws. People who do not obey the laws are punished by the police.

Every policeman has a different job, task and target to perform, and is accordingly posted to a police station or a check-post. They are trained to help people in distress. They are also posted at places of some violence and disturbance prevails. Traffic police is entrusted with the job of punishing people who violate traffic rules. They are also entrusted with the job of giving protection to political leaders, VIPs and also common man if they are in need. They also give protection to major places of worship and other important places. The policeman also plays a role in controlling the mob in case of public strikes and demonstrations. He may control them either by hitting sticks or firing by the permission of their superior. Policemen also help in times of emergencies and disasters. They also co-ordinate with search and rescue force, fire police and medical officers in times of emergencies and disasters like earthquakes, floods, pandemic etc.

Though the policemen work in shifts, his job is a tough one. He maintains peace and harmony. He is tough with people who violate rules. He is the guardian of our society.
